SOCIAL and PERSONAL

ISS ANNIE STEGER WINSTON, well known as a talented and designiful Richmond author, has a short story in the August Century that is written in her liappiest style, and entitled "Love and the Terror."

The hero of the story is "The Terror," otherwise known as Thomas Jefferson Tunbury, a refreshingly natural and naturally depraved and interesting specimen of the genus "small boy."

The effect on his hitherto unimpressionable mind and heart by "Love," as percesented in the person of Fredericka Brantley, furnishes rich material for the exquisite humor and insight into boy-nature, which renders Miss Winston's childish summer idyl, with a mountain hotel environment, so thoroughly true to life and so absolutely readable.

THROUGH FEDERAL COURT

Deserter Being Discharged by State Court
New Steps Will Be Traken.
NORFOIK, VA., July 24.—William Morgan, an alleged deserter from the St. Helena naval training station here, having been discharged under habeas corpus proceedings in the State Court at Savannah, following his arrest by the civil authorities in Chatham county, Ga., the next step is expected to be an effort by the naval authorities to arrest and extradite Morgan through the Federal courts. The procedure is expected to be the Issuance of a Federal warrant with the arrest of Morgan by a United States marshal in Georgia. Application to the Federal court for the transfer of Morgan from Georgia to Virginia would then follow.

The action of the court in Georgia in dismissing Morgan under habeas corpus proceedings establishes a precedent against the summary arrest and delivery, for reward, at naval and army stations of alleged "atragglers" and "deserters" for whom the navy and army have offered rewards to be subsequently deducted from the pay of the alleged deserters themselves, with traveling, hetel and all other expenses of the captor charged up against the "deserter" to later come from the latter's pay.

Five Years for Perdee.

In Wake Superior Court this morning Judge Walter Neal imposed a sentence of five years at hard labor in the penitentiary on Frank Perdee, a former car inspector for the Seaboard Air Line, convicted of stealing hams from a freight car on the Seaboard freight yards here last March. Say Staley Not Killed.

Governor Gienn is being urged to grant a pardon for H. B. Register, a former prosperous farmer and United States commissioner in Columbus county, now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary for being an accessory before the fact in the killing of Jim Staley, a negro of the neighborhood by his son, Jabel Register, who was hanged for the crime. The wife and three daughters of Register are here to make an appeal to the Governor in behalf of the old man, who is reported to be in very feeble health. The contention is being set up that the negrow was not killed and that the body found and charged to have been that of Staley was not him; that Staley went to New York for four years, then came to the content of t who shot Revenue Officer Reece in Moore county some months ago; and that the prosecution of the Registers was really a conspiracy by some enemies of the family. Governor Gienn says he will institute a careful investigation into the case.
